

Home education: questions and answers

Despite the existing variety of municipal and private educational institutions, some parents prefer their children to be educated at home without attending schools, gymnasiums, lyceums and colleges. What attracts people to this format of education? What are the advantages and disadvantages of home education? Let's try to answer the most common and important issues related to "schools at home".

1. First of all, decide the features of this learning format. Unlike conventional schools, it allows parents to choose educational programs and material, based on which the child can develop their skills and get maximum benefit from each lesson.
2. Home education is intended primarily for those families who made the choice in its favor. Any student – regardless of health, age and personal characteristics – can learn beyond standard educational institutions.
3. How much does education at home? Modern family is available as a free form of home education, and paid programs. The cost of the latter varies in a large range and depends, as a rule, from those items that will explore the student.
4. Many parents are concerned about whether they will be able to work in the process home-based education of children. Experts answer quite clearly: Yes, it's real. You can opt for partial or telecommuting. In some families, control of the educational process rests on the shoulders of one parent, while the other continues to work.
5. Speaking about the benefits of family home education, many experts say the flexibility of this pedagogical concept. Parents decide what subjects to study their son or daughter, in what amounts will be material, and how to build classes. He is not afraid of ridicule from classmates, street fights, drugs and other negative factors in the teenage world.
6. The problem of self-organization and motivation of the child. Parents need to interest the child learning, to find him interesting for learning to help establish a schedule and routine. If you manage to do it, in the future parents do not participate in the child's education, they do not explain the subject, check the lessons, but if necessary, connect to explain complex issues or can arrange online meeting with a tutor or teacher.
7. Children in home schooling learn faster and more efficiently. This is achieved primarily because the children do not need to repeat the same subject many times, they move at their own pace, based on their interests, using modern sources of information. Children are interested to learn new things, experiment, and Express yourself. School, unfortunately, this does not help. So, if you want to raise curious, intelligent and free child, choose home education. You will not regret this decision!
